Thursday

- Scattered showers and thunderstorms in southern CA mountains and deserts, as well as the Sierra may produce strong winds and lightning. New fire starts possible.
- Poor air quality in far northern CA due to nearby wildfires.

Thursday-Monday

- Prolonged heat risk for much of the state will likely cause impacts to not only sensitive groups, but those in the general population without access to adequate cooling and hydration.

Monday-Tuesday

- Temperatures still above average, afternoon thunderstorms possible (especially the mountains), and elevated to critical fire weather conditions.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Unseasonably hot temperatures and thunderstorms over portions of the mountainous/desert areas of California are expected.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong high pressure will be over Northern California through Saturday. North-Northeast/Offshore winds will be 10-15 mph with gusts to 20-25 mph during nights and mornings, and just a bit lighter during afternoons. In far Northwest California Northeast winds will gust to 30 mph or so during nights and mornings and 20-25 during afternoons. Temperatures will be as much as 20 degrees above normal. Afternoon relative humidity (RH) will be 5-15%, with recovery only to 20-30% at night in the breezy areas. The stable conditions under the strong high will also lead to poor smoke dispersion and poor air quality in canyons and valleys near active fires. The marine layer will be shallow and only areas along the immediate coast will get relief from the very hot temperatures.

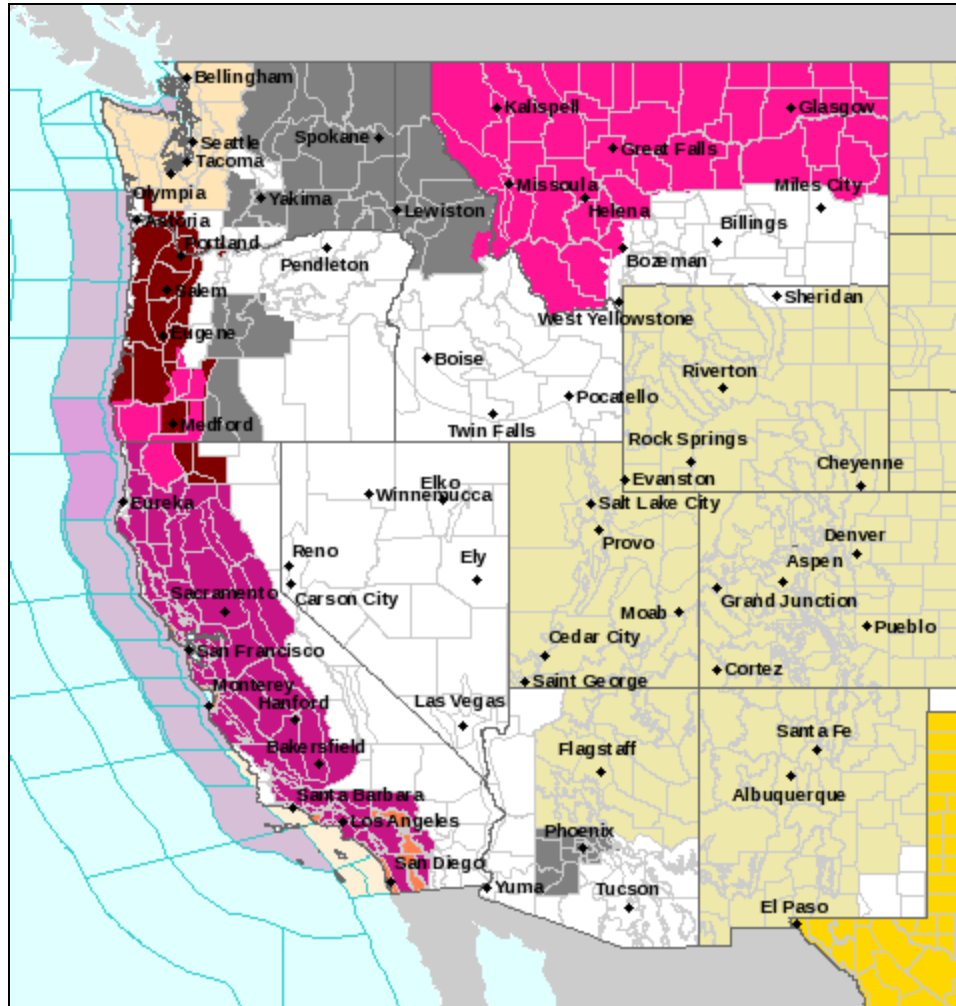

On Sunday the flow will turn Southeast-South as the high repositions over UT/NV. This will allow onshore flow to return in coastal PSAs and the delta breeze to bring cooler humid air to most of the Sacramento Valley. There is a chance that subtropical moisture will move through Southern California and up toward Northern California late Sunday and produce isolated thunderstorms in the mountains. If this pattern materializes thunderstorms will increase over the region during the early and middle part of next week, but with increasing humidity and rainfall.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered thunderstorms continued through the overnight hours across much of the desert and adjacent areas of the San Bernardino and San Jacinto Mountains. These storms have been producing brief downpours as they move northward at 10 mph. Since the atmosphere is quite unstable, scattered convection will be possible throughout the day across the Angeles, San Bernardino and Cleveland N.F. into the desert. Other areas, including the Sierras southwest into Ventura County, will see thunderstorm development by early afternoon. The storms are expected to produce rainfall and dry lightning is not expected outside the desert. Temperatures across the mountains of Southern California may be 3-5 degrees cooler today due to cloud cover. But elsewhere, near record high temperatures in the 90s near the coast to 110 in the valleys and lower foothills will be possible today and tomorrow. Less convection is expected Friday with the highest concentration of storms likely occurring over the southern Sierras. While RH has increased over much of the district, minimum RH will be low across the central coast interior the next two days where minimums around 10% will be possible in San Benito and interior Monterey County. There will likely be a lull in thunderstorm activity Saturday as strong high pressure builds into northern California, but subtropical moisture may reach Southern California Sunday and Monday, bringing a better chance of wet thunderstorms to areas south and east of I-15. It will continue to be extremely hot over Central California this weekend where highs will likely surpass September records in the San Joaquin Valley. The central coast interior may see readings close to 110. But temperatures should cool slightly Sunday and Monday over the southern part of the state due to more clouds and weak onshore flow. Next week, look for temperatures to remain 5-10 degrees above normal with isolated storms each afternoon near the higher terrain. No strong winds are expected (outside of thunderstorm activity) the next 7-10 days.
